

An Unsettling God: The Heart of the Hebrew Bible

“Old Testament scholar Brueggemann plays out in detail the tension in the Hebrew scriptures between a feral God who wants relationship (but not domestication) and the people of God who want a static deity, a ‘king.’ The peoples’ tendency toward settledness and a desire to ‘go it alone’ lead to systems of defeat that can only be overturned by a dynamic agency outside those systems. This is deep biblical exploration from one of our leading scholars.”

—Sojourners