

Contents

Preface	xi
A Unique Approach	xi
A Particular Audience	xii
A Pastoral Perspective on the Counseling Relationship	xv
Notes to the Reader	xvi
Acknowledgments	xvi

Part 1

Family Systems Theory and Marital Conflict

1. A New Way of Caring	3
The Importance of Theory	4
A Brief History of Bowen Family Systems Theory	6
The Family as an Emotional Unit	7
Thinking about People in Their Emotional Context	8
Systems Thinking, Theology, Causation, and the Counselor's Role	11
2. Emotional Systems	15
The Idea of a System	15
Emotion, Thinking, and Feeling in the Bowen Theory	17
The Life Forces: Togetherness and Individuality	21

3. Anxiety and the Emotional System	25
Two Kinds of Anxiety	26
Anxiety and Fusion	27
Anxiety and the Two Life Forces	29
4. Differentiation of Self	33
Fusion and Closeness
(Or, Two “I’s” Do Not Make a “We”)	34
My Definition of Closeness	35
What Is Differentiation of Self?	36
The Differentiation Continuum	39
5. Triangles	45
Some Examples of Triangles	46
The Close/Distant Dance and the Origin of Triangles	48
Fluid and Fixed Triangles	53
Dealing with Triangles: Neutrality	58
6. The Emotional Development of a Couple and a Family	61
The Marital Contract and the Emergence of Counseling	61
The Two Become One?	63
Faith and Marriage	64
The Family Life Cycle	65
Sibling Position	66
7. Symptomatic Mechanisms	69
Emotional Distance	70
Marital Conflict	72
Over- and Underfunctioning Reciprocity and Personal Dysfunction	74
Projection of Anxiety to a Child	77
The Triangular Relationship	78

Part 2

Family Systems Theory in Counseling

8. The Counseling Relationship in the Bowen Theory	85
The Counseling Relationship as Cure? 85
Bowen Theory, Counseling, and “Individual Problems” 86
Emotional Latitude and Differentiation 87
The Counselor’s Family History 89
The Counseling Relationship in a Larger Perspective 90
The Assumed and Assigned Importance of a Significant Other 91
Bowen’s Different Approach 93
The Expression of Feelings in Counseling 94
Counseling as Coaching 95
Neutrality and Pastoral Caring 96
 9. Getting Started and Assessing the Couple	 99
The First Contact 99
Avoiding Secrets 101
Dual Relationships 102
Doing Assessments 103
Assessment Criteria for Moderate and Severe Marital Conflict 111
Assessing for Physical Abuse and Fighting 114
 10. Goals for the Counseling Process	 119
Reducing Anxiety 119
Altering the Emotional Climate 122
Being in Charge of Process 123
Tracking the Relational Process 126
First Counseling Session with George and Martha: Exploring Reactivity 127
Interruptions and Being in Charge of the In-Office Process 132
Increasing Self-Focus 133
Engaging Both Partners and “Resistance” 134

Shifting the Relationship Process	135
Thinking about Family	137
11. Addressing the Triangles in Counseling	141
Defining and Managing Self in the Counseling Triangle	142
Working with the Couple's Triangles	144
Some Examples of Marital Triangles	146
Triangles and Change	149
The Affair Triangle	151
Opening Communication	155
12. The Counseling Process: Beginning Phase	157
Working for Self-Focus	157
The Essence of Change	160
A Verbatim Example: Starting to Develop Self-Focus	161
13. The Transition to Middle-Phase Counseling	173
Markers of the Middle Phase	173
Looking at Martha's Hurt	174
Working with Martha's Bitterness	178
The Next Session and Martha's Emptiness	181
A Turning Point with Martha and "Old Family History"	183
Some Specific Aspects of the Transition Phase	186
A Spiritual Crisis	188
The Move Toward Family and Unresolved Emotional Attachment	191
14. The Counseling Process: Middle Phase	195
Unresolved Emotional Attachment	195
Getting Ready for Family-of-Origin Work	197
Coaching George on His Family Work	198
Martha Goes Further into Her Emotional Cutoff	203
15. Coaching Family-of-Origin Work	211
Reentering the Family as a Researcher	212
Developing a Multigenerational Family Diagram	215

Differentiation and Triangles	216
Special Points of Concern for Coaching	218
16. The Counseling Process: The Termination Phase	223
Premature or Early Termination	223
Termination in Later Phases of the Work	225
Ending with George and Martha	227
Rethinking Beliefs and Values	228
Afterword: On Character	231
Appendix 1: Family Diagram Symbols	237
Appendix 2: Training Programs in Bowen Family Systems Theory	239
Selected Bibliography	241
Index	243