

Endorsements for Limping But Blessed

"Limping But Blessed is a moving and heart-achingly powerful book that will leave you hopeful, empathetic and forever changed. Reading Jason's story was a gift: of pure hope, of uninhibited love and of the raw struggle that finds us in our most broken places and allows God's light to permeate that brokenness. I found myself tearfully grateful for the chance to walk alongside this family in their grief so that I may seek to better understand what that kind of devastation means to a family, to a marriage, to other relationships and friendships—and yet I also find immense joy in witnessing how the love for a precious little boy continues to transform hearts around the world. Limping But Blessed reveals that God's grace filters into even the most heartbreaking points of our lives."

—Courtney Westlake, author of *A Different Beautiful

"It's hard for some to imagine the personal anguish that Jason Jones describes in this book. But for others, this story will seem painfully familiar. What makes Jason's telling of tragedy different, however, is that he faces his demons, doubts, and despair. And he discovers a way to think about God that makes sense, despite his questions and torment. I recommend this book to those who have stopped believing in God or stopped believing that life has meaning in the face of evil."

—Thomas Jay Oord, author of *The Uncontrolling Love of God

"Jason Jones weaves a beautiful tapestry of tragedy, loss, redemption, and hope in Limping But Blessed. This is a must-read for any parent, or human being, who has gone through significant loss."

—Mike Berry, author of *Confessions of an Adoptive Parent: Hope and Help from the Trenches of Foster Care and Adoption

"In this beautifully written and brutally honest book, Jason Jones tells the story of the accidental death of his three-year old son, of his anger at God's apparent indifference, until he discovers God with him in his grief, and of his struggle to once again find joy and meaning in life, without forgetting his son or his grief. People in grief often think and say what they've been told they ought to think and say. Reading this gripping book will give them permission to be themselves: to cry out in grief, to be angry, to wrestle with their doubts."

—Nicholas Wolterstorff, Yale University, author of *Lament for a Son

"If you've ever struggled with doubt, this book is for you. If you've ever questioned why God let's bad things happen, struggled with pain and grief, been hurt by well-intentioned phrases like 'God has a plan,' or had to work to reconcile theology and experience, then this book is for you. Jason's honesty and vulnerability allows us to know that we are not alone while pointing us towards redeeming pain and questions. There is a difference between redeeming pain and trying to reconcile it. The power of Jason and Jacob's story shows us that it is in light of the questions, fear, pain, and doubt, not in spite of them, that redemption may just be possible."

—J. J. Peterson

“After the passing of his son, Jason asked his siblings, ‘How am I going to make it?’ If you've ever found yourself asking that question, this could be the book to help you find an answer. But what you will find here isn't a cheap solution to take away the suffering, instead what you will encounter is the God who suffers with you. Jason's story filled my eyes with tears and my heart with hope. I hope it does the same for you.”

—Luke Norsworthy, pastor of Westover Hills Church and podcaster at Newsworthy with Norsworthy.